> competition for the amateur international impression in his concluding match, but close Mayer rallied strongly, but his effort came a bit too late, Poggenburg winning by 400 to 383.

There was one period during the contest any chance for victory. In the sixteenth inning the Philadelphian was worrying along with an average of 8 and a total of 152, while Poggenburg had 246 on his side of the score board. Yet the contest developed into the closest of the tournament. Mayer's spur started in the thirtieth inning, when, with the score 362 to 249 against him, he clicked off 22 points. He followed with a count of 21, and a little later ran 51 and 22 in consecutive Both Duffy and Mc-Guire have added immense strength to their teams during the winter, and it would be foolish for anybody to count either team out of the pennant running. "Detroit is dangerous at all times. The Tigers have tremendous batting strength and are game fighters to the last. They should be better this year than last, which means that the Athletics will have to work harder to beat them. "Boston always was a good club. Hal Chase should not be criticised for ridding his team of Austin and Laporte because they were supporters of George team last season One of the essential features of a cessful ball team is harmony, and Chase was aware of the fact that these players opposed his regime he acted wisel: in disposing of them. You can't run a ball team and have internal dissension. It is better for the players involved as well as for the team as a whole, to have Austin and Laporte play elsewhere if the charge that they were Stallings' men is true.
